My teaching is carried out at two different institutions: the University of Amsterdam, and the Brussels School of Governance. In recent years, I have been focusing on Master level teaching and educational management.

At the University of Amsterdam, most of my teaching is done with colleagues: Claske Vos and Gertjan Hoetjes. We co-teach courses on thesis preparation which provides students with an opportunity to go to Brussels to prepare the ground for their MA thesis, and “Cultures of Governance”, which is an advanced level (ahem..) course that brings MA students to the same level when using theories that try to explain European governance. I have begun to teach in my own research area (yippee?!), where I teach a course on Building a Digital Europe.

At the Brussels School of Governance, I teach three courses, one of which is supported by the Jean Monnet Programme. This course is entitled European Digital Sovereignty (DESTINY), and you can find a copy of the course manual here. I also teach a research methods lab (similar to my Amsterdam thesis preparation course), and a course on policymaking and interest representation.
